A Note on Usage

These templates are for your personal studio use. Feel free to make and sell pieces created with them, that's what they're for! If you're planning to produce work at scale using these templates, please reach out first. I appreciate the conversation.

Hello friend,

You're holding something new: a printed collection of pottery templates designed to help you create small, beautiful vessels in your studio.

This is BOOKLET Nº1 of what I hope becomes a regular publication. Curated, original templates delivered to your hands, not just your inbox or feed.

I'm testing an idea here. In a world where everything lives on screens, I wanted to create something you could hold, fold, prop up on your work table, and return to again and again. Something that belongs in your studio, not your downloads folder.

This pilot issue features templates for espresso cups and shot cups. Small forms that don't require much clay but offer endless possibilities for experimentation. They're quick to make and perfect for testing new techniques.

Why I'm doing this: I want to know if printed templates matter to you. Do you prefer having something physical? Would you keep a collection of these? Should I continue this idea? Your feedback will shape what comes next, so please tell me everything: the good, the bad, the honest.

You can share your thoughts by scanning the QR code at the end of this booklet or by emailing me at fran@fromfran.com.

Thank you for being here, for supporting this experiment, and for making things with your hands.

Let's see where this goes.

With gratitude and enthusiasm,

Fran

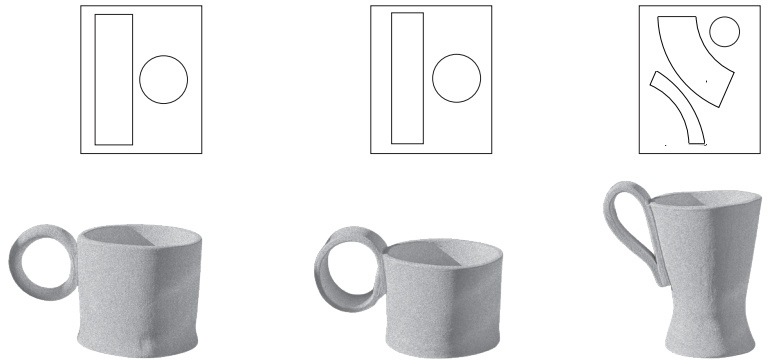

I'd love to hear what you think about this booklet. Scan the code below to fill out a quick feedback form, or email me at fran@fromfran.com and I'll send it to you.
